OneClickFirewall is a handy piece of software for users who want to block specific apps from connecting to the Internet without spending too much time. [a] - Always only block a specific program from accessing the Internet.[b] - Never restart when updating.[c] - Never go offline.[d] - Never reboot.[e] - Always immediately block an application when a new update is available.[f] - Never try to restart when updating.[g] - Never update without restarting.[h] - Never try to update when offline. * - Save Files at %Userprofile%\Local Settings\Application Data\OneClickFirewall*. * * - When selecting an application, no context menu will show up in the Explorer, you will have to open the OneClickFirewall menu and block the app that way. * - If you have more than 1 app, just right-click an application and block it.Q: The right way to construct some JS object I want to do some specific operations on some attributes of an object. I want to do this using the right syntax. So I have a user object like this: var user = { id: 1, firstName: 'John', lastName: 'Doe', email: 'johndoe@example.com' }; I want to be able to do some operations like: user.id; user.firstName; user.lastName; Of course I can write this in JavaScript using the "regular" syntax like this: var user = { id: 1, firstName: 'John', lastName: 'Doe', email: 'johndoe@example.com' }; But I want to do it using the "right" way (which is the way JavaScript does it) and I don't know what I should be using: var user = { [id]: 1, [firstName]: 'John', [lastName]: 'Doe', [email]: 'johndoe@example.com' };

What your dog could do for you When I started working with the ASPCA I never imagined that I would one day get the opportunity to put my skills as a dog behaviorist to good use. I am proud to say that I have been able to help a wide variety of animal shelters across the country as they work to help their residents find homes. I am also proud to say that the ASPCA provides all of their staff, volunteers and shelter residents with instruction in how to take care of dogs. Although I don't work with every shelter in America, I do speak to a variety of shelters every day and I am currently on the road as part of my #ConnectingWithDogs campaign. It has been truly rewarding to be able to help some of these shelters build their online presence and develop ways to connect more effectively with potential adopters. In order to make sure that shelters can successfully adopt out their dogs, shelter volunteers need to know how to "interview" a dog to determine whether the dog is ready to go home. Shelter volunteers also need to know which questions to ask of the animal's owner in order to make sure that the dog is getting the best possible home. I've been able
